Interview with
Alexis Jeffries

Marshall School of Business -
University of Southern California,
MBA World Summit Alumni, GLC member

Could you give a brief description of your MBA World Summit Experience?

My experience was wonderful!!! I've lived in Europe previous and traveled extensively, but it wasn't until attending my first MBA World Summit in Berlin that I truly felt like I had become a global citizen. I was surrounded by the best and brightest peers from around the world and got to share tons of learnings, experiences and make new special memories with people who I now call some of my closest friends. My summit experiences are always a great time.

How does the MBA World Summit compare with the rest of your experience as an MBA Student?

The MBA World Summit was a perfect capstone to my MBA experience because I got to make use of all of the knowledge I gained about cross-cultural business practices and global ways of working. As opposed to sitting in a classroom and learning about how work in being done across China or India or certain regions in Africa, I got to sit down and have incredibly valuable conversations in real time with Summiters who were working, studying and living in those places and having business experiences every day.

Which moment stood out the most for you at the MBA World Summit?

I really loved being able to explore the host city with Summiters after the conference. In Berlin, I toured various street art pieces and went to brunch and had a picnic with Summiters from around the world the day after the conference ended. In Cape Town, I traveled to the Cape of Good Hope, toured South African wineries, had dinners outside by the Marina and shared rooftop cocktails with folks from everywhere like Nigeria, Canada, Colombia, and more! These moments have been truly magical because we started as strangers on day 1 of the conference, and ended up as good friends a couple days later!

What is the greatest lesson that you learnt from the MBA World Summit?

The greatest lesson I've ever taken from the MBA World Summit is gratitude. Sitting in these Summit Laboratory Sessions (SLSs) and listening to these incredibly bright and talents global peers is something we can easily take for granted. I've learned to sit back, recognize how fortunate I am and always revel in the fact that I was selected for this intimate and elite community of global citizens, which has given me a network worldwide and friends for life. Those opportunities don't come every day, so I try to remember how lucky I am to have had these experiences thanks for QX and the MBA World Summit.

For more information visit: www.mbaworldsummit.com